MEALTH DEPARTMENT.

W. DE F. DAY, M. D., Sanitary Superintendent :

SIR—In accordance with your directions, we have inspected a number of factories and tenement-houses in which cigars are manufactured, and have the honor to submit the following report:

In accumulating data for this report, and in making it up, we would say that our observations have been made entirely independently of each other, and that there has been the least possible comparison of results, until these results had been been acceptanced to committed to writing.

by each separately committed to writing.

In making these inspections, we have been into each room in which the manufacture of cigars was being carried on, as well as into the other rooms; have seen the people at their work and at their meals; have talked with them and with their em-ployers, when we have chanced to meet the latter; and have thus enjoyed the best opportunity for judging for ourselves of the effects upon the workmen and their families of their peculiar

Of all the complicated questions, which have lately arisen in regard to the workers in tobacco, the only one which has been submitted to us for investigation is that which relates to the comparative state of health of those who work at their own homes and those who work in shops, and the comparative sanitary conditions under which they comparative sanitary conditions under which day respectively labor.

The principal points to be observed in such an inquiry are the following:

Air, light, ventilation, food, cleanliness, and material emanations, and in this order we shall consider them.

consider them.

Air. By this heading is meant the air-space provided for each individual in the work-room.

In the work-room of Lichtenstein Bros., No. 268 Bowery, measuring 90 x 33 x 15 feet, there are usually about 120 operatives.

This gives each person a fraction over 371 cubic feet of air-space.

Feet of air-space.

In the factory of D. Levy & Co., No. 90
Bowery, the principal work-room measures 90 x 25 x 14, feet and is occupied by about 85 persons. This gives each person a fraction under 305 cubic feet of air-space.

feet of air-space.

The air-space for the operatives, numbering about 120 in the work-rooms (measuring together 65 x 36 x 12 feet) of Wangler & Hahn at 290 and 292 Bowery, is 234 cubic feet for each person. We have been through a large number of cigar factories, and the above are fair samples of the average work-room in such establishments, both in size of room and number of occupants.

In the tenement-houses we have visited a large

In the tenement-houses we have visited a large number of families engaged in cigar-making. These families, as a rule, are small, and but few persons work together in the same room. One of us took accurate notes of 66 such families, and the other of 148, a number which we think is sufficiently large to serve as a basis for an average. These families were not selected ones, but were taken as they came under our notice, and include all the families in 17 large tenements, with a few

The group of 66 families consists of 219 persons, including children and infants, giving an averaged of about 31/3 persons to a room or suite of rooms.

The work-room, which is generally the sitting-room, kitchen, and dining-room of the family, according to the estimate of one of us measures usually about 15 x 16 x 8 feet, giving an airspace of 576 cubic feet to each person, or an average of 60 per cent. more than that of the largest feetow room.

factory room.

The group of 148 families was found to include

The group of 148 families was found to include 577 persons, including infants and children, giving an average of 3 89.100 persons to a room.

According to an independent estimate made by the other one of us, the average dimensions of this same kitchen and work-room are 16 x 14 x 8½ feet, furnishing an air-space of 489 cubic feet to each person, or an average of 32 per cent. more than that of the most spacious factory-rooms.

It should be remarked that these figures do not represent the full advantage as regards air-space

It should be remarked that these figures do not represent the full advantage as regards air-space possessed by the workers in tenements over those in factories. For in the figures applying to factories only the workers, whereas in those applying to tenement-houses, all persons in the family, whether workers or not, have been included, thus doing injustice to the tenements in that many of the children are much of the time away at school, out of doors, or in other rooms, in which there is no tobacco. there is no tobacco.

Light. The shops are usually well-lighted by windows at both ends, and the tenement-house workers labor at the windows. Both have plenty Ventilation. The shops and tenements can both be well ventilated by opening the windows and doors, but for purposes of warmth they are usually kept closed during working hours, and the air of the rooms is bad. For the reason given above, the deterioration of the air in the houses is less rapid than in the shops. less rapid than in the shops.

less rapid than in the shops.

Food. Those who work in tenement-houses have an advantage over those who work in shops, in the possession of greater facilities for the preparation of the midday meal. Some of those who work in shops either patronize a neighboring restaurant, or go home to dinner, if they are near enough; but most of them eat cold sausage or cheese with bread, or something of the sort, or perhaps some dish which they hastily warm on the common stove, while those who work at their own homes, appear, as a rule, to provide hot, well-cooked meals.

With regards to the effects of the emanations

With regards to the effects of the emanations of total regards to the exposed food, it seems to us the advantage would lie with neither.

the advantage would lie with neither.

Cleanliness. In this respect, it must be confessed, the tenement-houses are far in advance of the shops. There is less litter upon the floors, less odor in the atmosphere, and far greater evidence of care and pride in the condition of the apartment. In fact, the working at an objectionable trade in one's own home would naturally lead to greater cleanliness, and care for appearances in person and surroundings, than the opposite.

In these five cardinal points nothing certainly can be urged against the manufacture of cigars in tenement-houses. There remain several minor points to be considered.

points to be considered.

The shop-workers go to their work at about 7 A. M., and leave at 6 P. M. The home-workers, of course, can work as early and as late as they please.

The wages earned by a single workman in the factory average higher than those he can make in a tenement-house, for the reason that the commoner qualities of tobacco are principally given out to be made up in the tenements, for which, of course, a less price is paid per thousand, while the choicer qualities of seed Havana, etc., are reserved for manufacture under the eye of the superindendent in the shop. But there is a compensation for this in the fact that, by the tenement-house plan many members of the family, the aged and rheumatic, the housewives, the mothers with nursing children, the daughters whom their parents would be unwilling to trust to the temptations and vicious associations of the shop, and even the school children in their hours of leisure, can all lend a hand toward swelling the family income to a figure considerably beyond what it would be, were the work only to be done in the factory. By the tenement-house plan, widows, with dependent families of small children, can not only keep them from want, but in comfort. The time spent by others in going to and from their work is also saved. The increased in fort. The time spent by others in going to and from their work is also saved. The increased in-come of families, gained in these ways, is a source of greater comfort and happiness to them. They have more rooms, better furniture, better food, and better clothing, than if they were more limited in their means of earning. In so far, the results of home-work are beneficial. With refurniture, better gard to the advisability of thus increasing the hours of labor, we have nothing to say. It relates rather to the economic than the sanitary aspects of the question, and the answer had better be left to the natural interaction of social

In our opinion, then, the home-workers labor under quite as good sanitary conditions as the shop-workers. During the day these conditions are very nearly the same for both, with a slight advantage in favor of the former. What are the effects upon the non-workers, the children and infants, of exposure to the emanations of tobacco? A categorical answer to this question could only be given after a very long, searching and patient investigation, and the proper sitting of a large accumulation of statistics. But as far as our observation and inquiry have gone, the children of families, who work in tobacco at home, are quite In our opinion, then, the home-workers labor as healthy in appearance, and as little prone to disease, as the average of children who are born and reared in tenement-houses.

There are quite as many plump and rosy babies, and quite as few puny and sickly ones, as will be found in tenements of equal size where no tobacco is manufactured. We mean, of course, in proportion to the whole number of babies in such houses. For it is undeniable that the number of children in the families of tobacco workers is surprisingly small. In the 66 families of which one of us took notes, as above mentioned, there were only 70 children, or an average of only a little over one to each married couple. And in the 148 families visited by the other there were only 234 children, making an average of 1. 58 100 to each married couple. When one considers the swarms of children that usually grow up in tenement-houses, in the families of the laboring and artisan classes, this paucity of offspring in a particular class becomes significant. In connection with the observations which were recorded in a report by one of us to the Board of Health last year, upon cigar-factories, might it not reasonably be considered that this fact is corroborative of views therein expressed with regard to the effect of tobacco upon the vigor of the reproductive system?

With regard to the emanations from the tobacco, the best evidence we could command was that afforded by the sense of smell. The odor of tobacco was much less pungent and irritating in the rooms of the home-workers, than many of the shops which we visited. The halls and passages of the houses in which cigars are manufactured are almost entirely free from the tobacco odor, and other families living in the same house with cigar-makers have testified to us of the cleanly habits of the artisans, and the inoffensive character of their employment.

At night, as we are informed and have reason is manufactured. We mean, of course, in propor-tion to the whole number of babies in such houses.

At night, as we are informed and have reason to believe, all the unmanufactured tobacco is carefully collected and wrapped up, so as to exclude the external air. For the making of cigars, the tobacco must be sufficiently moist to prevent its breaking and cracking, and so during the day it gives off no visible dust. If it were left exposed all night, it would dry rapidly, and by morning be so altered, as to be unfit for use. Being carefully covered, therefore, during the night, there is very little smell from it during the hours of sleep, probably not more than a box or two of cigars may impart to an apartment in which they are kept; and when we consider that a large majority of laborers and mechanics keep tobacco or cigars in their rooms, and fill their rooms with tobacco smoke before going to bed, we think it can hardly be shown that the home manufacturers of cigars are any more exposed to deleterious in can hardly be shown that the home manufacturers of cigars are any more exposed to deleterious influences from tobacco in their rooms, than any other class of the tenement-house population.

Another question remains to be considered, viz.: Whether the tobacco leaves act as fomites, and serve to propagate contagious diseases throughout the houses into which they are introduced.

We have been able to discover no evidence that such is the case. There have been many cases of small-pox in families engaged in cigar-making, which have never come to the notice of the sanitary authorities until death took place, and which, probably, represent a certain proportion which have never come to the notice of the sanitary authorities until death took place, and which, probably, represent a certain proportion of cases which always remain undiscovered. The tendency to conceal such cases is a natural one. The knowledge that a case of small-pox existed in such a family, if bruited about, might and probably would seriously injure their business, and it is not surprising that they prefer to keep it quiet, and allow it to recover without the knowledge of outsiders. But it is the same with any family who carry on a small business in their own house. A baker, a milliner, a fancy goods dealer, a grocer who lives in the rear of his shop, shows the same desire for concealment, and would be superhuman if he did not. That the business of cigar-making in tenement-houses has influenced the spread of contagious disease in any other way than this we cannot believe. That the tobacco itself gives origin to such diseases is, of course, too absurd for discussion.

We have now given the results of our investigation somewhat at length, and will briefly recapitulate them. We find that the home-workers have more air-space, as good ventilation, light and food; that their apartments are quite as cleanly; that their children appear as healthy as the shopworkers. In addition to this, they earn more money, are enabled to live in better quarters, have better food, and can afford more of the luxuries and elegancies of life, and, in so far, are living under better hygienic conditions; that they pass their hours of sleep under, probably, as favorable conditions; and that they do not, as a rule, occasion any nuisance to their neighbors. With all this, however, there is evidence enough that the manufacture of cigars is not a healthful employment; but we believe that its evil effects are equally felt by those who work in shops or at home.

are equally felt by those who work in shop

The following is a list of the tenement-houses visited by us, in which the manufacture of cigars is carried on:

After the above report was written and ready to be submitted to you, we received instructions from you to visit several additional houses. We have done so, and present the results in the following addendum to the original report. We have found no reason to change any of the views heretofore expressed, and would only call attention to the remarkable corroboration which these later visits furnish of the statistics and conclusions herein-

It will be seen that these figures show as plainly as the others the comparative infertility of tobaccoworkers. One family was found in which there were 7 children. This being so remarkable an exception to the general rule, the family history was traced, and it was ascertained that the parents had only worked at cigar-making for four years, having previously been farmers, and having had the greater portion of their numerous progeny while engaged in the latter occupation.

Respectfully submitted.
