Message from NYC Chief Service Officer Anusha Venkataraman

January 2021

Dear New Yorkers,

We are so pleased to present to you the 2019 Volunteers Count report from NYC Service. This is not the year any of us expected, and as you might imagine, we certainly planned on presenting this important data much closer to 2019 than early 2021. While the information and stories presented in this report were collected before the pandemic, they form a baseline through which we can understand the robust civic engagement that has marked 2020.

Service and civic engagement take many forms, and can look like many different things. Voting is civic engagement, and communities are turning out in record numbers to ensure their voices and votes count. Protest and mass mobilization are also civic engagement, such as we saw following the murder of George Floyd earlier this year. And volunteering, of course, is civic engagement.

Almost 550 City agencies and organizations, ranging from small grassroots neighborhood groups to large institutions such as hospitals, reported over 661,000 volunteers serving with them in 2019. And, roughly 360,000 young people engaged in service in New York City public schools. These one million plus volunteers took on a range of roles and responsibilities, and together served to make New York City a more equitable, just, and sustainable city to live in.

No doubt, this is an undercount – New Yorkers are fiercely dedicated to their communities, and serve in many ways not always thought of or reported as “volunteering.” We must be mindful of how volunteerism is defined – and in particular, the inclusion of service within faith-based communities, which is how many communities of color and immigrant communities serve. Aiding and supporting neighbors in need is also service – whether direct and informal, or organized through a mutual aid network. Forming and promoting an expansive and inclusive vision of service is at its core an equity issue, and a prerequisite for taking an anti-racist approach to service. With the release of the 2019 Volunteers Count report and the NYC Civic Engagement Survey shared within it, we lift up the breadth and diversity of service in New York City.

We also begin the process of centering service, and civic engagement at large, as not just “nice” but wholly necessary in addressing our city’s and our country’s greatest challenges. Traditional volunteerism often focuses on intention - “doing good,” “giving back.” But leaving service in the frame of “nice” prevents us from looking at the systemic impact these acts of service have, and their power to either dismantle or reinforce systems of exclusion and oppression in all their insidious forms. Though not always overtly political, service is not neutral.

While we don’t yet have a complete picture of the last year, we know that this year looks different; civic engagement looks different, and we expect more from it. And it is often those messier forms of civic engagement where we can have the greatest impact on transforming institutions and effecting systemic change.

We at NYC Service look forward to continuing to support our partners, city agencies, volunteers, and all New Yorkers in expanding opportunities for civic engagement and service in every corner of the city. Together, we are building a more vibrant democracy and a more equitable and just city.

Thank you for all you do, and for being there for each other.

Yours in service,

Introduction

Traditionally, NYC Service releases its annual Volunteers Count report each April detailing the accomplishments by volunteers in NYC for the previous calendar year. However this year, for so many reasons, has been a year like no other.

While National Volunteer Month is traditionally a month of celebrating acts of service, April 2020 marked the peak of the public health crisis in New York City and emergency response efforts that depended on volunteers taking action in order to save New Yorkers' lives. A global pandemic exposed the depth to which injustices that have existed for years in our city and country – from systemic racism to socioeconomic inequities – impact all New Yorkers. Communities in NYC have suffered unspeakable loss due to COVID-19, and families have had to fundamentally shift to respond to new economic conditions and the demands placed on their time. And amidst the pandemic, residents have taken to the streets to protest the systemic racial inequities inherent in our institutional and cultural systems.

Since the start of the pandemic, volunteering and service have remained a constant – if not amplified – mechanism of response and community empowerment. During this time so many of our partners and organizations across the city are supporting their communities through providing resources, emotional and spiritual support, and, of course, organizing and mobilizing. Here are a few ways New Yorkers united in service:

- Thousands of residents answered the call to volunteer ensuring the most vulnerable New Yorkers had access to food and mental health resources. An estimated 11,051 people served through the City's Volunteer Coordination Task Force and our partners at New York Cares from March through October 2020.

New York Cares

DUMBO Moving & Storage, Inc.

Food Bank for NYC

- The city's nonprofit network dramatically shifted operations to provide critical supplies, PPE, and services to their communities in a moment of great need, and mutual aid groups empowered residents to collectively meet the needs of their communities.
- A cohort of 20 NYC Service Civic Impact Funding recipients engaged 2,120 volunteers who moved over 145,000 units of food to more than 50,000 households and individuals.
- Many NYC businesses changed operations to provide logistics support and supplies to the City of New York, donating approximately 75,000 square feet of storage space and helping to transport and store over 100,000 pounds of PPE, including masks, gloves, eye protection, and ventilators.
- Over 40 NYC Service corporate and business partners, including all Good For Me. Good For My City. partners, redesigned volunteer projects to focus on COVID-19 recovery projects.

These examples represent a fraction of how communities, community organizations, and businesses provide critical support to their fellow New Yorkers. NYC Service remains committed to those serving our great city, in all five boroughs, and in communities responding to the challenges the current social and economic conditions continue to present.

Continuing with this commitment, we offer you the 2019 Volunteers Count report, highlighting the important work of volunteer networks in nonprofits, city agencies, colleges and universities, faith-based groups, and hospitals from January 1 to December 31, 2019, ending just before the COVID-19 pandemic. This service has laid the groundwork for the ways in which we support each other now through one of the most difficult times in our city.

In addition, we also share our 2019 NYC Civic Engagement Survey, based on a citywide study conducted in late 2018 that looks deeply at volunteerism across all five boroughs. Detailing who is engaged and where, the survey provides invaluable information showcasing the high rates of engagement in NYC across race and education levels, and important insights into why people volunteer to support their communities and values.

Finally, in 2019 we expanded our Mayoral Service Recognition Program with the introduction of the Mayor's Service Recognition Awards, which highlight the important ways individuals and groups have contributed to the civic framework across NYC.

As we release this report highlighting the critical services provided to our city through volunteers, we also acknowledge that the need for volunteerism, civic engagement, and service across NYC has been driven by the longstanding pain experienced by our Black and brown communities and the unjust treatment of Black New Yorkers and Americans in particular. We at NYC Service support you, and support New Yorkers advocating for, empowering, and serving their communities. We believe it is our responsibility to answer the call to be actively anti-racist. As our city works to dismantle systemic racism amidst a public health crisis, and grapples with the disproportionate effects of COVID-19 on communities of color in NYC, our vision of uniting New Yorkers in civic engagement to create sustainable change is made possible by listening to you - our community partners - and working together to achieve change.

Thank you to every resident, community leader, and organization for answering the call to build an equitable NYC through volunteering and service: in 2019, 2020, and beyond.

NYC Civic Engagement Survey

Civic engagement is a critical and crucial element to NYC communities, but has traditionally been underreported in national research studies looking at volunteering and service. National data on volunteering shows that the rate of volunteering in New York City metro area is 23.3%, among the lowest in big cities across the country (and the national average is 30.3%).¹

However, this snapshot does not seem to encapsulate the full range of volunteering and service we see in New York City, and does not reflect what NYC Service had found reported in communities across the city. In 2017, NYC Service commissioned a pilot study in several neighborhoods in Western Queens, finding rates were much higher than reported and almost half (48.4%) of the participants had volunteered in the last year.

Building on that study's findings, we commissioned the Center for Urban Research at the CUNY Graduate Center to conduct an online citywide survey in late 2018 to follow up on volunteerism across the city, and see if the initial community study results translate on a citywide level. The results were equally striking at 52.8% of respondents volunteering, and provides valuable insight into who is volunteering and why some volunteer while others do not. While concluded in 2019, this citywide survey has formed what is perhaps the most accurate depiction of volunteerism in NYC to date, and is important to understanding the enormous people power that has carried New Yorkers through the pandemic in 2020.

The NYC Civic Engagement Survey found rates of volunteering in New York City are 2x higher than previously reported.

2019 Mayoral Service Recognition Awards

NYC Service's Mayoral Service Recognition Program (MSRP) was launched to highlight civic engagement and social resiliency, and recognize volunteer and service programming across NYC. In 2019, we expanded the program to give four awards recognizing the diversity and range of volunteering and service experiences.

Partnership Impact Awardee

Girls Incorporated of NYC & Moody's Corporation

"Partnership is a key ingredient of the G3 program's success... The project-based effort was a team effort, and there's been a real synergy. Moody's has been generous with ideas and creativity, which allows people here on our end to do our best for the girls."

Pamela J. Maraldo
CEO of Girls Incorporated NYC

The Partnership Impact Award honors an organization and business that partnered on a project which went above and beyond to serve the NYC community.

Girls Incorporated of NYC & Moody's Corporation have worked to create the Generation Giga Girls (G3) program, the first ever Data Analytics high school program for girls from low-income communities in New York and across the nation. With the focus on collaboration within this award, the partnership between Girls Incorporated and Moody's stems from a 7 year partnership in bridging the gap within the digital age, and using volunteers to work with youth to build social capital and connections in the business world.

Community Impact Awardee

The Bronx is Blooming

"Our work serves the communities surrounding the parks we work to revitalize. The 500,000+ residents of the Bronx neighborhoods we serve will benefit from the new native plantings and healthy trees that will be cared for by PLACE, as well as the increased absorption of stormwater from the trees we mulch."

Jennifer Beaugrand
Executive Director & Founder of
The Bronx is Blooming

The Community Impact Award honors an organization that leverages the power of volunteers in innovative and resourceful ways to strategically address city or community needs.

The Bronx is Blooming is a Bronx-based nonprofit organization dedicated to environmental advocacy, community building, and youth leadership development. Through its Blooming's PLACE (Program for Leaders Advancing their Community's Environment) program, staff utilize environmental service projects to mentor and build youth leadership from within under-resourced communities in the Bronx.

AmeriCorps Alum Impact Awardee

Aissatou Barry

"A lot of people don't see art as a form of activism, but to give that power to youth to express themselves—as an attorney I think of art as free speech—their art is one of the ways free speech is practiced."

Aissatou Barry
AmeriCorps Alum

AmeriCorps Alum Impact Award honors an AmeriCorps alumnus who has continued to embody the AmeriCorps spirit of "Getting Things Done" in New York City communities beyond their service year.

Utilizing skills and connections from her AmeriCorps experience, Aissatou serves as a member on the Art and Resistance through Education (ARTE) board. She has taken the lead in building community partnerships and providing legal counsel within the organization to young people involved in the criminal justice system.

Youth Impact Awardee

Staten Island Youth Chapter of the NAACP

"It can be hard to see a future when you see everything happening, but that's why being involved, setting an example, and doing events so people can be aware of voting, knowing their rights in encounters with police officers – that's why all of it is really important stuff that communities, especially youth need to learn."

Elijah Scott
Youth Member, Staten Island Youth
Chapter of the NAACP

Youth Impact Award honors an individual or group of youth who have had tangible impact in their community.

The Staten Island NAACP Youth Council is an extension of the Staten Island Chapter of the NAACP where students between the ages of 8-24 have their voices heard regarding the injustices they and their peers face on a day to day basis. The group works to develop and give trainings on civic engagement – such as voter engagement – within the Staten Island community.

APPENDIX: 2019 Volunteers Count Participating Organizations & City Agencies

NYC Service is pleased to share the list of 2019 Volunteers Count contributors on the following pages.

This year, we have also provided the information in searchable format through our partners at NYC Open Data, where users can search the data set to find similar organizations by type of organization, location, and number of volunteers engaged yearly.

You can access the disaggregated data to see the list of nonprofits, city agencies, colleges and universities, faith-based groups, and hospitals contributing to the 2019 Volunteers Count report.

We sought to find a way to make this information useable and collaborative to provide greater use to the NYC volunteer community, as we build out greater avenues to unite the service networks across all five boroughs.

Friends of Corlearshook Park

The Bronx is Blooming

“Volunteers play a vital role in our mission. GJL de SP’s mission (over the summer) is to prevent the summer reading slide which greatly affects communities of color. Our volunteers helps us reach this goal by serving as reading mentors, reading books aloud and listening and correcting children while they read. Many of the families who participate are non-native English speakers. The free service we provide allows their children, many of whom have IEPs, to continue to practice over the summer and in many cases catch up.”

Grupo Juego y Lectura de Sunset Park

NYC Department of Veterans' Services

“We have many seniors that have lost a loved one and need a new purpose in life. Volunteering and coming to the center everyday has given them a new purpose, new friends and a second home they can come to.”

Bergen Beach Youth Organization

NYC Health + Hospitals

“This program recognizes the skills and talents each member of the New York Tech community already has and encourages us to use them for a purpose greater than ourselves.”
