SAINT IS BEHAVIN'

Last week was St. Patrick's Day! St. Patrick, of course, is one of the patron saints of Ireland, known for ridding the island of snakes.

This got us thinking: who would the Patron "Saint" of Ethics be? What historical figure best embodies the principles of Chapter 68? Send us your nomination; we'll pick our favorite to feature in next month's Puzzler.

Remember: to be a proper saint, the person must have already passed away, and have performed a "miracle" during their life. Ideally, this would be something ethics-related, but we'll also accept non-ethics-related accomplishments, if they're cool enough.

Submit your nomination to contest@coib.nyc.gov by Friday, April 16th — maybe we'll be celebrating that person with a special, extra-ethical day this time next year!
