Former FDNY Explorer Reflects on Becoming a Firefighter

“I think that being a New York City Firefighter has made me a better person both mentally and physically, because it's a career where you're continuously learning and training,” said Engine 234 Firefighter Nicholas Welch, who previously served as a FDNY EMT and Explorer. “I think knowing that every time we leave the firehouse on the rig, we are going to make a difference in someone's life, makes this such a rewarding career as well. It all started when I was a teenager training with the Explorers and I knew back then that this was a great career for someone like me, because I like to help people.”
