Commissioner's Column

As we move forward with our "Zero by 30" program, adding and upgrading recycling programs will be crucial in helping us reach our goal. An area of focus has been electronics, or e-waste. Because of a state law, we no longer are able to collect that material at curbside. While it's necessary to keep the harmful components in these items out of landfills, residents must now find other, legal ways to get rid of the items they no longer want.

Recently, I went to Albany to testify in front of lawmakers regarding the rule. In keeping with its intent, I believe electronic equipment manufacturers should be required to provide collection of e-waste that meets a higher standard of convenience for residents. That said, we have a number of programs to help residents properly recycle this material.

e-cycleNYC is our in-apartment building collection program for e-waste. Buildings have special clean-out days, or a permanent collection cage is delivered. Then, our partner, ERI, takes the material away for proper recycling. Since its inception in November 2013, the program has grown to more than 6,700 residential buildings, servicing nearly 540,000 households, and has collected nearly 1,000 tons of waste. Another option is our SAFE Disposal Events, now held twice a year in each borough. Residents can drop off e-waste, along with other potentially harmful household items. In that same time period, we have collected more than 700 tons of e-waste from the events. Additionally, thanks to the urging of Council Member Steven Matteo, we now accept e-waste at our Special Waste Drop Off sites, and so far, the change has been well received.

Through added manufacturer responsibility, and our city-run programs, we will meet the needs of residents looking to recycle their items, and help bring us to "0 waste."

Celebrating St. Patrick's Day

The Department was a proud participant in recent St. Patrick's Day parades, including the annual Rockaways and 5th Avenue processions. The Emerald Society Pipes and Drums performed at both parades, as well.

Mayor Thanks DSNY at State of Our City

At the State of Our City address, Mayor de Blasio recognized members of the City's uniformed services who performed acts of heroism. While some expect NYPD and FDNY to get all the glory, the Mayor was sure to say "...And don't forget our Sanitation Department. A would-be robber at a 7/11 found himself face-to-face with one of New York's Strongest – Curtis Jackson – who also happens to be a former Marine – and who swiftly took him down..." The Mayor also made special mention of all Sanitation workers, first responders and city employees who helped the city recover from the January storm.
