OPINION OF THE COUNSEL TO THE CORPORATION.

The Constitutional Amendments and the Charitable Institutions.

The constitutional amendments to article 8, sections 10 and 11, do not prohibit the City from making provision for the aid and support of the poor through any agencies or instruments heretofore created or sanctioned by legislative act for the relief of the destitute.

The legislative sanction of such means, contemplated by amendment 11, comprehends existing charitable institutions organized by law, as well as those which may be created after the adoption of the amendment.

The appropriations for the charitable institutions for the year 1875, by resolution of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, passed December 24, 1874, were made for the entire year, before the Constitutional Amendments came into operation, and could not be affected by those amendments.

LAW DEPARTMENT—OFFICE OF THE
COUNSEL TO THE CORPORATION,
NEW YORK, February 15, 1875.

HON. ANDREW H. GREEN,
Comptroller:

SIR—I have considered the question submitted to me by your letter of the fourth instant, and proceed to give you my opinion thereon. The constitutional amendments which have given rise to the doubt on your part of the propriety of continuing the payments to certain charitable institutions in this City directed to be made for the year 1875 by a resolution of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment passed December 24, 1874, are contained in the following sections added to article 8 of the Constitution of 1846:

"SEC. 10. Neither the credit nor the money of the State shall be given or loaned to or in aid of any association, corporation, or private undertaking. This section shall not, however, prevent the Legislature from making such provision for the education and support of the blind, the deaf and dumb, and juvenile delinquents, as to it may seem proper. Nor shall it apply to any fund or property now held, or which may hereafter be held, by the State for educational purposes.

"SEC. 11. No county, city, town, or village shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit, to or in aid of any individual, association, or corporation, or become directly or indirectly the owner of stock in or bonds of any association or corporation, nor shall any such county, city, town, or village be allowed to incur any indebtedness, except for county, city, town, or village purposes. This section shall not prevent such county, city, town, or village from making such provision for the aid or support of its poor, as may be authorized by law."

From an examination of the said resolution of December 24, 1874, it appears there are twenty institutions in this City, incorporated or organized under special or general laws, and classed under the general head of "Asylums, Reformatories, and Charitable Institutions," to which an aggregate of $825,905 has been appropriated for the year 1875, in various sums. These institutions, bearing various names, and having various objects of relief of different classes of individuals, are all corporations or associations heretofore established by law for the relief of the destitute.

It is to be observed concerning these institutions, that as heretofore organized and aided, they have united the advantages of private funds, contributed for the special objects aimed at by each, with the auxiliary benefits of public assistance. They thus reach, in various forms, the great objects of human suffering arising from destitution, misfortune, and incapacity, in the most effective manner: in a manner, that is to say, which brings into the field of active benevolence and philanthropy the exertions, influence, and money of private bodies or individuals, supplemented and assisted by public funds. If, in consequence of a change in the organic law of the State, the public funds must now be withheld from a union with private care for the special objects of this elaborate system of charity, many thousand persons of all ages must be thrown immediately upon such provision as the public authorities of the City can make for them in its almshouses and other receptacles for the poor and the classes standing in need of reformatory care, without any assistance from the private funds and private property now employed in these great objects. A result so unfortunate as this ought not to be arrived at, unless it is forced upon us by a plain and necessary construction for the organic law of the State.

Constitutional amendments are generally to be construed in reference to the practices, mischiefs, or disadvantages which they were designed to obviate or remove; and where they affect, or are supposed to affect, a great existing system of charitable or philanthropic relief, they are to receive a reasonable construction that will relieve the communities affected from any other disability than such as is necessarily imposed by their provisions. Guided by these canons of interpretation, I shall endeavor to give to these constitutional amendments what seems to me to be their true meaning and operation.

The tenth section, in its first clause, prohibits any grant by the Legislature of the credit or money of the State as a loan to, or in aid of any association, corporation, or private undertaking. Applying this constitutional provision to the well-known previous practice of the Legislature, it is apparent that the purpose was to cut off and prevent all grants of the credit or money of the State to or in aid of all associations, corporations, or private undertakings, such as had previously obtained the assistance of the State. To a certain extent such aid was already prohibited by article 7, section 9, of the Constitution, which declared, that "the credit of the State shall not, in any manner, be given or loaned to or in aid of any individual, association, or corporation." But now, in order to make a more effectual provision against the same mischiefs, it is provided by this amendment that neither the credit nor the money of the State shall be given (granted) or loaned to, or in aid of any association, corporation, or private undertaking. This, if it stood alone would prohibit the Legislature from assisting, by credit or money of the State, any of the objects of public bounty which had heretofore received such aid, however meritorious or peculiar those objects might be. And it is historically true that many associations, corporations, and private undertakings of more or less meritorious and charitable character, did receive Legislative assistance every year; and it was for the reason that the State bounty was thus unequally distributed, according to the localities where the successful applicants happened to be placed, that the amendment was designed to put an end to the practice of such aid. But then the amendment itself, in order not to cripple the Legislative power entirely in respect to certain peculiar objects of the public bounty, immediately proceeds to establish certain exceptions to the sweeping prohibition of the first clause.

It declares that the prohibition shall not prevent the Legislature from making such provision, as it may seem proper, for three special classes of persons. These are the education and support of the blind, the deaf and dumb, and juvenile delinquents. It also further saves from the prohibition any fund or property now held or hereafter to be held by the State for educational purposes. It appears, then, that the 10th section, while placing the Legislature under a restriction which will prevent it from granting the credit or money of the State to or in aid of any association, corporation, or private enterprise, establishes certain exceptional objects, takes them out of the restriction, and leaves them to the fostering care of the Legislature, through the aid of the credit of the State or its money, even though those objects may be effected through associations, corporations, or private undertakings. This obvious meaning and operation of the tenth section have an important bearing upon the construction of the eleventh section, relating to the powers of counties, cities, towns and villages.

Section 11 of the amendments make the following provision: "No county, city, town, or village shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit, to or in aid of any individual, association, or corporation, or become directly or indirectly the owner of stock in or bonds of any association or corporation, nor shall any such county, city, town, or village be allowed to incur any indebtedness, except for county, city, town, or village purposes." It is obvious from the context of this provision, that one of its chief purposes was to prevent counties, cities, towns, and villages from giving aid in their corporate capacity to any undertakings that are not strictly municipal in their character, such as railroads and other works of general public importance. But, as the prohibition is sweeping and comprehensive, it must be held to include all objects, whether aimed at by individuals, associations, or corporations, which are not comprehended in the municipal purposes for which the several municipalities enumerated are established; and if the clause which embraces the prohibition stood alone, without the introduction of any exception, it might be difficult to find its limits anywhere, excepting at the line which divides strictly municipal purposes from those which are not strictly such. But the eleventh section, like the tenth, immediately proceeds to establish an exception to the prohibition, and to take a certain great object out of its operation. This object is "the aid or support of the poor;" it being declared that "this section shall not prevent any such county, city, town, or village from making such provision for the aid or support of its poor as may be authorized by law."

The inquiry then must be, in the case of any county, city, town, or village, What aid or support of the poor is authorized by law? It is to be observed that the authorized provision is not confined to the mere "support," or feeding, or clothing, or sheltering of the poor, but it extends also to their "aid," which may, in the case of infants and other destitute persons falling within the category of the "poor," comprehend reformatory or disciplinary training, or the healing of disease of body or mind; for not only is the "aid" of the poor a phrase sufficiently comprehensive to include relief from moral and physical evils of all kinds from which the poor cannot protect themselves, but this phrase is supplemented by an enlarging description which extends it to any kind of relief that is authorized by law.

And by this description I do not understand the clause to refer only to such aid or support of the poor as may be authorized by law after the adoption of the amendment; but I understand it to refer to existing provisions of law which were in operation at the time of its adoption, as well as to those which may be made thereafter. The meaning is, that all such aid or support of the poor as is sanctioned by legislation is a fit and constitutional object to which to give the money or loan the credit of the county, city, town, or village. Of course there may be in respect to particular counties, cities, towns, or villages, laws in operation which are local in their character; but if they are laws contemplating the aid or support of the poor of that particular locality, they will continue to operate by force of the exception established by this amendment.

But it has been suggested that the whole amendment operates to repeal or set aside all the existing laws which have hitherto made provision in aid or support of the poor, and that the charitable institutions to which your question relates cannot continue to receive the aid heretofore given to them until new enactments have entitled them to it, because the phrase "as may be authorized by law" is prospective only in its operation. If this phrase were anything more than a description or qualification of the kind of relief which the amendment means to authorize a county or a city to provide for by a gift of its money or a loan of its credit, the objection might have some force. But the phrase is a mere qualifying description or limitation of the kind of aid or support; that is to say, it must be an aid or support which is authorized by law, and not merely one that is made at the pleasure of the municipal body, and without the previous sanction of the Legislature. Any other construction would lead to consequences so grave as to render it necessary to reject it; and one of those consequences I now proceed to point out.

As one instance illustrating the nature of the right of many of these institutions to public aid, take the case of "The New York Juvenile Asylum," first incorporated by a special act passed June 30, 1851. By an amendment of its charter made in 1854, this corporation is authorized to receive and take under its care and management two classes of children between seven and fourteen years of age, namely, those voluntarily surrendered and trusted to it by the parents or guardians, and those committed to its charge by a magistrate's order. The corporation was originally endowed, as to its buildings, partly by private and partly by public funds; but, in order to provide for the support of the children, by an amendment of its charter made in 1858, it had granted to it a perpetual right to have a special tax levied, collected, and paid over to it every year, by the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of New York, amounting to a sum not exceeding a certain number of dollars for each child. This grant, made to a corporation in consideration of the objects for which it was incorporated, is a perpetual contract between the State and the corporation that it shall have the right to enjoy the proceeds of this tax. It has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that a perpetual exemption from taxation of the property of a charitable institution, or an institution of learning, granted by the Legislature in aid of the objects of the institution, is a contract, the obligation of which is forever binding on the State, so long as the corporation applies its property to the chartered use. (Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wallace's R., 430; Washington University v. Rouse, ibid., 439.) Upon the principle of these decisions, a grant to a charitable corporation, in aid of its charitable objects, of a perpetual right to have a certain tax levied for its benefit, must be regarded as a contract, the obligation of which the State can do nothing to impair. I am of opinion, therefore, in regard to any of these institutions which, at the time of the adoption of this amendment, held a perpetual right, granted by the Legislature, to have a certain tax levied and paid over in aid of their objects, that the amendment is not to be construed as having repealed or abrogated that right, because such repeal or abrogation would impair the obligation of a contract, which cannot be done by the State, either through an amendment of its Constitution or by legislative act. I am further of opinion that any of these institutions which, at the time of the adoption of this constitutional amendment, had a right by law to have the aid of the public funds, whether by levy of a special tax or otherwise, are within the saving of the amendment, as means authorized by law for making provision for the aid or support of the poor. And I am further of opinion that if there are any of these institutions which, not having a right to require the levy of a special tax, or other fixed right to be supplied with the public funds, are yet established by law for the relief of the destitute, it is still competent to the City to make to them such grants, in aid of their charitable objects, as the proper governing authorities of the City may see fit.

That none of these institutions, having by law a special capacity to act in the aid and support of the poor, were expected or intended by the framers of the amendment to be excluded from the aid of municipal funds, is manifest from the report of the Committee of the Revisers of the Constitution (Committee on Sectarian Appropriations), by whom the amendments were proposed. "Your Committee," said the report, "are fully impressed with the belief that the proposed amendment will not seriously interfere with the great good accomplished by the Orphan Asylums, Homes for the Friendless, hospitals, and other charitable institutions so freely scattered over our State. The Boards of Supervisors of the various counties, and the Common Councils of the different cities, have all the power they have heretofore had to PAY TO EACH CLASS OF SAID INSTITUTIONS the most liberal compensation for the care and support of the different classes of unfortunates for whom they were designed." * * * (See the report signed by E. W. Leavenworth, Chairman, March 15, 1873.)

There is another view of this subject which conduces to the same conclusion, so far as the appropriations for 1875 are concerned. By the City Charter of 1873, the Board of Estimate and Apportionment are directed at a certain time to "make an estimate of the amounts required to pay the expenses of conducting the public business of the City and County of New York, in each department and branch thereof, for the next ensuing financial year." When the estimate becomes final, "the several sums" embraced in it become and are "appropriated to the several purposes and departments therein named." These provisions of the Charter are to a certain extent a delegation of legislative power; for while it is not competent for the Board to create new subjects or objects of expenditure it is devolved upon the Board to determine and appropriate the amounts required for the public business of the City and County in each department and branch thereof. This is pro tanto a legislative function. The question is, then, whether the supplying of these institutions with the public funds of the City or County is a part of "the public business of the City and County" in any "department" or "branch" thereof? It has already been seen, if a correct view of the character of these institutions has been taken, that they are private corporations or associations, endowed by law with the power of relieving various wants of destitute persons, and organized by law for this special purpose. They stand, therefore, as substitutes for a great deal of public machinery which the City or County would have to provide for the relief of human suffering or leave it wholly unprovided for. While they are, in respect to their legal position and rights, private corporations or associations, they perform to a certain extent a public function. And it seems to me to be no fanciful and strained construction, but one resulting clearly from their functions and their relation to public objects, to regard so much of their affairs as is involved in supplying them with the aid of municipal funds as a part of the public business of the City in one of its branches. They were, then, entitled to have the estimate and appropriation made for them by the legislative action of the Board, if not cut off from this right by the constitutional amendment. But the amendment did not come into operation until January 1, 1875, and the final action of the Board was had on the 24th of December, 1874. It was an estimate and appropriation for the whole year 1875, and not for any part or fraction of the year; and, in my opinion, it stands unaffected by the constitutional amendment, although I am also of opinion that, even if the amendment were applicable to it, it is entirely consistent with the purpose and the text of that amendment.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the payments contemplated by the appropriation of December 24, 1874, for the year 1875, under the head of "Asylums, Reformatories, and Charitable Institutions," must be made.

I am, sir,

Very respectfully, yours,
E. DELAFIELD SMITH,
Counsel to the Corporation.
